

PDLC (Polymeric Dispersed Liquid Crystal) is a type of smart material that can change its optical properties in response to an electric field. When power is applied, the LC molecules align, allowing light to pass through. When power is removed, the molecules become disordered, scattering the light and making the material appear opaque.

□□□□ □□□ □□□

